Skype is aware of the claim, but so far company officials "have no evidence to suggest that this is true," Skype spokeswoman Kat James said in an email message. On Saturday, Paglee in an email responding to MarketWatch questions, identified himself as a former chief executive of Hanzen and wrote that "Hanzen is not in any way involved in the reverse engineering of Skype." Paglee said in the email that the words "hanzen.cn" were in his screen shot because it is his Skype user name. TOM.O, +7.35% If Skype will face a home-grown Chinese competitor, it could siphon off new users and reduce the company's growth there. I am not a recruiter. Paglee did not identify the software firm in question. sued Chinese rival Huawei Technologies Co. Ltd. MarketWatch wrote a story about the claim, made by Charles Paglee, on Friday, as did CNET. Please make a comment if the link is not working for you. She currently consults, writes, and codes from her home in Palo Alto, California. If Skype's software has been replicated without its permission, Ebay would not be the first U.S. company to fall victim to Chinese software pirates. Even if there is a knock-off version of Skype, "the software would lack the feature set and reliability of Skype," said James, the spokeswoman. Ebay has forecast that Skype will generate about $200 million in revenue this year, thanks to a series of product upgrades and the addition of new, business-focused Skype products. She has worked for Google, Microsoft, and Apple and served on Google's hiring committee. The interviewer is looking to evaluate your ability to solve algorithmic problems you haven't seen before. But based on what appeared to be an Internet address shown in a screen shot posted on his blog, MarketWatch reported that it could be Hanzen Corp., a Chinese software company. The Web site, which also states that "overseas software companies come to China and sell their products at the same prices they charge in their home country," and further calls such software "outrageously expensive," says the company has "a number of different software projects in the works." Released in late 2004, Skype's software has been downloaded by more than 100 million users in more than 100 countries, according to the company. Most recently, at Google, she served on the hiring committee where she interviewed hundreds of candidates and evaluated thousands more. Yet on Thursday, the chief executive of Vozin Communications, which also makes software that allows PC users to make phone calls, wrote in his blog that a friend of his in China called his Skype account with software developed by a Chinese software firm. It was here that she discovered the disconnect between candidates, their skill set, and their interview performance. Still, given that Skype is free, it may not suffer as much from piracy as Microsoft, for example, which charges for its products. "No amount of reverse engineering would threaten Skype's security and integrity," she added. Typically, only people who have downloaded Skype's software onto their personal computers can call other Skype users on their PC. Through her company, CareerCup, Gayle has worked with many of the top tech companies to reform their hiring practices and implement interviewer training programs. She is the author and creator of the best-selling Cracking the Interview & Career series: Cracking the Coding Interview, Cracking the PM Interview (co-authored with Jackie Bavaro), Cracking the PM Career (co-authored with Jackie Bavaro), and Cracking the Tech Career. And as such, I know what it's like to be asked to whip up brilliant algorithms on the spot and then write flawless code on a whiteboard. Those numbers surpass the benchmarks set in the early days of Hotmail (since bought by Microsoft) and the music file-swapping sites Napster and Kazaa, making Skype among the fastest-growing user platform in Internet history. algorithm and coding problems form the largest component of the interview process. I've been through this as a candidate and as an interviewer. Cracking the Coding Interview, 6th Edition is here to help you through this process, teaching you what you need to know and enabling you to perform at your very best. EBAY EBAY, +0.14% bought Skype for $2.6 billion in cash and stock in September, betting that its software, which allows users to make PC-to-PC calls for free over the Internet, would become the leading communications platform for Web consumers.
